Sir/Mam,

I'm writing to express my interest in an Editorial position in your organization. My unique combination of technical expertise, creative abilities, and experience managing my own blogs makes me an ideal person to help your editorial team thrive.

I strive to develop and implement editorial standards for both style and quality that are used by writing and editorial teams.

What I consider the best part about my writing skills is that I write with all my heart. I started my own fitness blog two years ago and since then I have always tried to keep myself as real as possible in front of my audience. The writing experience that has come to me by creating content for my own blog is the best experience that I could have ever aspired for. But now, I feel is the right time to move forward and explore myself in this field professionally. I want to learn and gain a whole of practical experience.

In addition, I have worked closely with other departments including marketing, sales, and HR. My little experience has taught me how to build strong relationships with all departments of an organization. I have the ability to work within a team as well as cross-team.

If I can provide you with any further information on my background and qualifications, please let me know. I look forward to speaking with you about this employment opportunity. I promise to cater the best of my abilities and grow with each passing day.

Sincerely

Khushboo Khorana
